hello!

From our Board President

Greetings!

As I sat down to write this message, I thought of the fun activities and adventures my children experienced during their time at the Children's Center. My family has always been big on tradition, and it seems we have some type of tradition for every holiday. Sometimes, it's just a song we sing and other times it's a bigger celebration. We even created a few extra holidays in the year to keep things fun!

Several of our traditions started with the incredible staff at the Children's Center. My older daughter learned a song about Cinco de Mayo that we look forward to singing every May 5th. My younger daughter learned about hedgehogs at the Children's Center and decided we needed to create a new holiday called "Random Hedgehog Day". She strategically chose the date to fill a holiday gap in the calendar, and we have been celebrating the hedgehogs each year on that date ever since.

I found a Youth First article that said "Children love routine and consistency; a family tradition provides this year after year. It also helps the children manage the changes in the year and gives them something to look forward to. In addition, family traditions enhance family and personal well-being and can also add to the family identity."

Whether it be a religious tradition, a decades-old family tradition, a special meal, or a new holiday to celebrate woodland creatures, I encourage you to reflect on your family traditions and the memories you have created over the years. Thank you for your support of the Children's Center and the work we are doing to support the families and children of Western Tidewater!

Best Regards,

-Jennifer

HIGHLIGHT:

The Koehn Boys

Written by
Mary Faison

Meet Waylon and Wyatt, twin boys marching to the beat of their own drums! As the boys reached two years of age, their mother Catherine detected they both did things differently. The boys were not able to do simple tasks on their own. They did not speak like other two-year-olds. They did not have the self-help skills they should have by this age such as feeding themselves or putting their clothes or shoes on. Following her motherly instincts, Catherine began advocating for her boys. At their two-year checkup, their pediatrician suggested that boys often develop slower than girls, and they would in time begin to flourish. However, Catherine's heart still told her the boys needed extra support.

She continued to battle her own fears, and through adversity she researched and looked for answers. Catherine enrolled Waylon and Wyatt into the Early Intervention program at the Children's Center. The boys began receiving speech therapy services and soon after began attending the Early Head Start program at the Southampton Head Start center. Through collaboration between their therapist and new teachers, Waylon and Wyatt began to make progress. The boys started saying words, feeding themselves, washing their own hands, and becoming more independent. The boys experienced new things, such as touching an iguana, finger painting, and riding bikes!

In early 2022, Catherine's suspicions came to fruition. Both Waylon and Wyatt were diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder. Catherine shared, "I knew in my heart the boys had autism. The staff at the Children's Center never treated them any differently. From our speech therapist to the teachers to other staff, they were all so accepting of us when we were navigating something so new and raw."

Waylon and Wyatt are thriving in the classroom and at home! They are learning to say more words each day! Both boys went from being non-verbal to saying five words and even short phrases and are even potty training! Catherine and her family and friends along with the Children's Center staff, have become a team of support for the boys. They all love, encourage, and nurture the boys to be exactly who they are. "Anything we needed the Children's Center was there for us." Waylon and Wyatt continue to break barriers, overcome challenges, and succeed by learning in their own way!

HIGHLIGHT:

The Lawrence Family

Written by
Mary Faison

Tameka Lawrence's 14-year-old son Isaiah is a gifted and talented student with close to perfect SOL scores. Many would never guess Isaiah had a speech delay at two years old. Tameka recognized he was not talking like other children his age. After telling her pediatrician her concerns, Tameka was linked to the Children's Center for Early Intervention speech services. "I so strongly believe in my heart if I hadn't enrolled him in speech services he would have been delayed in school."

Tameka was then a young mom who had no idea there were also other services available through the Children's Center to support her. When Tameka became pregnant with her daughter Myah, she learned she could enter the Early Head Start Home Visiting program for pregnant moms. Leona Mabry, Tameka's Home Visitor, helped her get prenatal care, and made her aware of the risks of postpartum depression. Tameka quickly realized after her last pregnancy, she needed this support. "It has been life-changing to have these supports in my life. I wouldn't have known the risks that come with postpartum depression and my family unit would potentially look very different today."

During Tameka's time as a mom in the Early Head Start, Head Start, and Early Intervention programs, she became very ambitious about Head Start services and how they can help families. She became an advocate with the Virginia Head Start Association. Tameka, along with only two other parents, were the only parents selected in the entire state to be on the advocacy committee. Tameka interacted with legislators and state senators, including Senator Louise Lucas, on the importance of early childhood education. She worked with the Virginia Department of Social Services on prevention goals and worked to help diminish the stigma around using DSS services and subsidy. Tameka also worked with the National Head Start Association advocating for raising teacher salaries and improving safety and healing communities following the Uvalde, Texas tragedy.

"For me, it's paying it forward and giving back because I know the impact Early Head Start and Head Start had on my life which sparked my passion and drive to want to spread this to others." Tameka reported the Early Intervention and Head Start programs did their best through, "The human one-on-one connections. When you are a young mom, scared of the unknown, it's easy to feel judged. I just needed one person who told me they understood, let me know it was okay and I belonged. That is what I want people to know. That is what I want every mom to know. They can get help, have their hands held, and be fully supported not only as a parent, but as a person."

Tameka still works as a Head Start advocate today and is currently the Children's Center's Policy Council Chair. Her daughter Myah is 3 years old and enrolled in the Head Start program in Suffolk. Her oldest son Roy is currently attending Norfolk State University on a full scholarship. Isaiah is excelling in high school and has plans for college.
